

CAUCUS WRANGLES.

Sunday Was a Busy Day With the Law Makers.

Sunday was the busiest day that the law makers will see for some time. The army of applicants for positions within the gift of the members was on hand and their importunities nearly drove the members out of their senses. There were at least ten applicants for each position and the city yesterday morning was littered with candidates' cards.

The main fight was a triangular contest between George Bradley of Ormsby, Con Ahern and Harry Flannery of Storey. The Storey candidates each had a large hatchet out chopping at the other and by Sunday noon the meat and gore was flying in Storey. Bradley laid low and took the benefit of the row and this captured the Caucus with 16 votes, the balance being divided up between the Storey applicants. After this fight was disposed of "the programme" was partly carried out, but another fight was started and out of the melee Ormsby got two more places, Miss Macie Farrell and Harvey Follet, which all hands conceded was pretty good for Ormsby.

In the Senate Caucus things were easily disposed of. Each Senator selected a place and there was just about enough to go round by giving Ormsby a Page, Ormsby and Washoe, by having no representative in the Senate, was left out in the cold to a considerable extent.

Stocks Booming.

There was a lively boom in the stock market this morning. Heavy sales in the whole list took place at advanced prices. There were sold 1,500 shares of Con. Virginia ranging up to $1 85, 2,200 of Mexican ranging up to 70 cents, 1,000 of Chollar up to $1 30, 1,200 of Union up to 55 cents and 1,700 of Best & Belcher up to 83 cents.

Opbir sold up to $1 40, Hale & Norcross up to $1 45, Jacket up to 42 cents and other stocks in proportion. Best & Belcher reached 88 cents after the board, but there was a shading off at the close. The excitement produced by the flurry was lively, and everybody was asking the reason for the movement. A number of different theories were advanced to explain it. Some said it resulted from manipulation, and others declared that it was based on merit in Con. Virginia and the Brunswick lode.

There was a rumor afloat that there was an improvement in Con. Virginia but it could not be verified and probably it is without foundation. It is likely that the rise was due to the pinching of short sellers who had to fill. The Brunswick might have furnished some reasons for it, however. There is a width of 5 feet of good ore in Chollar-Brunswick, and this development is regarded very highly by mining men. The bullion from the Brunswick this month will amount to considerable.—Chronicle.

JONES AND NIXON.

The Winnemucca Editor Stays to the Finish.

The fight of George S. Nixon for U. S. Senator did not materialize the opposition to Jones that was counted on by Mr. Nixon's friends. The call for the Caucus on attaches included the U. S. Senatorship and the Caucus was called for 1:30 o'clock. After signing the call some of Nixon's friends said they did so under a misapprehension and quite a formidable kick was developed. The kick staved the Caucus off until 7:30 o'clock.

Meanwhile Assemblyman Fellows was sending dispatches to Nixon and receiving replies every hour. He was urged to come but persistently declined on the ground that his wife was still seriously ill, and in one dispatch he said it would be a crime to leave her side an hour.

Meanwhile great pressure was brought to bear on his friends in Carson to have several sign a dispatch asking him to withdraw and make Jones' election unanimous. His friends, however, could not be induced to send such a message on the ground that if he withdrew, the charge would be made that it was for a consideration, and his friends might also be included in the condemnation that would follow.

Meanwhile it was decided by Jones' managers, headed by Gen. Powning, that it would be wise to not mix up the Senatorial affair with the general Caucus, and it was again postponed until last evening.

Meanwhile the friends of Nixon were still canvassing the situation and seeing that the election of Nixon was an impossibility, and discussed the best way of disposing of the situation. There was considerable difference of opinion on this head, some wanted Nixon to go into the caucus, accept his defeat gracefully and bow to the will of the majority. Others held that this would be a sacrifice of the principles fought for and they wanted to refuse to let his name go to the caucus at all, but to carry the fight into the joint session and make some red hot speeches.

Nixon was again wired but he merely replied that his wife was still quite low and that his friends could use their own judgment.

It was finally decided that Mr. Nixon's name would be placed before the caucus where he could be on the square and take his medicine like a man. Any other course would simply land him outside the party and be his political ruin.

It was argued that if Mr. Nixon was in the city he would consent to no other plan as he was a politician that always stood by the rules of the game.

The caucus was called at 7:30 and but two members remained away.

Mr. Nixon's name was placed before it for U. S. Senator along with that of John P. Jones, and some very hot speeches were made on both sides. The oratory could be heard resounding through the Capital building and a battle royal was fought.

The caucus resulted in the naming of John P. Jones and the vote stood: Jones 37 Nixon 3.

All the Silver men were in the Caucus at the final vote except Commins and Skaggs, who were elected on independent tickets. All voted for John P. Jones except the Humboldt delegation. The choice was then made unanimous. After the Caucus the crowd adjourned to the Arlington house and Powning and Gorham set up the champagne in the dining room.

The good health of John P. Jones was proposed and drank standing. Mr. Powning then paid a graceful tribute to Hon. George S. Nixon and drank the good health of Mr. and Mrs. Nixon after which the crowd dispersed.

Bicycle Law in Mexico.

A bicycle in Mexico must be equipped with a bell, a metal plate showing its license number, and at night a lantern. The number of wheels in the capital is increasing rapidly. All makes are represented, and the very latest patterns and improvements are demanded. There are many splendid bicycle trips to be made in the valley. In every direction extend roads that have paths made smooth by the tread of burro and barefoot native, and while they would offer little inducement to a vehicle, furnish a good track for wheels.
